

A wide-angle photograph of Niagara Falls, showing the massive volume of water cascading over the edge. The water is white and frothy as it falls, creating a thick mist that fills the air. In the foreground, dark, moss-covered rocks are partially submerged in the turbulent water, with white foam from the rapids crashing against them. The overall scene is one of immense natural power and scale.

Something to remember.....

The first year we came to Canada, my husband and I went out there once every quarter to check out the view of the Falls in the four seasons.

Whenever friends came from abroad, we would take them to see the Falls.

Back in February 1981, we took two friends from Singapore(Alice and Greg) to Niagara Falls. After parking, as soon as I put my foot out of the car, I had to pull it back in despite I had tall boots on. That was a brutally cold day in Niagara Falls !
